

Challenging and informative, the World Disasters Report 1999 focuses on natural catastrophes and environmental change

Who is threatened by rising tides, earthquakes, floods, droughts, deforestation, hurricanes or spreading disease?

How will climate change affect tomorrow's world?

Where are the flash points for future resource wars?

What should politicians, aid workers, donors and companies do about it?

The World Disasters Report provides comprehensive, expert analysis of the world's ever-growing humanitarian crises. The 1999 edition tracks the humanitarian system, examining:

- environmental trends, disasters and their implications
- floods and how to deal with them
- the impact of Hurricane Mitch
- institutional collapse and winter hunger in Russia
- the response to earthquakes in Afghanistan
- El Niño's effects on Latin America, Africa and the South Pacific
- falling aid budgets
- the SPHERE project for minimum standards in disaster response
- an overview of 1998 Federation operations
- a disasters database
- Red Cross/Red Crescent listings

Indexed, illustrated, Internet-literate, maps

Published annually since 1993, the World Disasters Report brings together the latest trends, facts and analysis of contemporary catastrophes and their effect on vulnerable millions worldwide. An indispensable information source and reference work for those searching for strategies and tactics in the face of disaster.
