

For breakaway areas which are situated in the forest zone, an effective measure is afforestation by trees which are suitable for the climate and the position on the mountain slope. Temporary shores are constructed in newly-planted areas and help to provide protection until the young trees have matured. These measures are shown in figure 10 and it will no doubt be appreciated that the work is costly and attended by severe practical difficulties.

Figure 10

