

DRAFT

Somalia: The Paradox of International Humanitarian Assistance and Military Intervention

Debarati G. Sapir and Hedwig Deconinck
Centre for Research on the Epidemiology of Disasters (CRED)
Department of Public Health
Catholic University of Louvain
Brussels, Belgium

This paper is an invited contribution to a volume on United Nations and Civil Conflicts sponsored by the Watson Institute for International Studies (Brown University, USA) and the Institute for Strategic Studies, Oslo. The paper also forms the basis of a seminar to be presented to UN staff in New York organised by the Academic Council of the United Nations System. The views expressed in the paper are the authors' alone.

The authors gratefully acknowledge the assistance received from:

Save the Children Fund UK: R. Burge, H. Mursal and J. Seaman; Somali Joint Health Authority: Ali Abdi Mohamed; Cabinet of the Minister of Defence, Belgium: Col. Sparenberg; European Commission: S. Illine, E. Thielmann and A. Tonnet; United States Marines: Maj. B. Tillet; UNOSOM: H. Cholmondeley and C. Petrie; UN-DHA: L. Clark; The Belgian Red Cross: L. Cloetens; MSF-Belgium: P. Caesar; World Food Programme: G. Simon.