

of all flood disasters and 93 per cent of flood-caused deaths in the period 1987 to 1996. The high death toll is not only due to the dense population in the flood plains of the region, but also the difficulties that the developing countries in Asia face in mounting an effective flood defence. Despite the widespread poverty, Asia suffered 54 per cent of flood-related damage in the period.

